

BoxScore Me – Please!

I’m still pretty young and this is my first real job. I worked hard in school, I borrowed a ton and now I’ve got plans for my life and career. I think I’m doing pretty well at my job, but I’m never really sure. Yeah, I get annual reviews – most years. But honestly, they aren’t that helpful. It feels like keeping the score secret until after the game is over. Found out in my last one that I’d been doing something that annoyed my boss for the whole year. He never took the time to tell me. How can you grow like that?

And now COVID-19 hits and overnight I’m working from home! I have even less visibility and feedback from people I work with. I was getting pretty frustrated and contacted my HR rep. Asked her how I could get more timely and useful performance feedback, especially in a remote working environment. She said, “I’ve got just the thing.” She gave me my own user account under the company’s BoxScore subscription. Now I don’t wait for an annual review or find out second hand what someone said about me. I have a quick and simple way to ask them directly – myself. I simply use the app to ask, “How did I do? Will you please BoxScore me?” And I get quick feedback that I can put to use right away.

The other interesting thing is that I get an amazing number of “good for you” comments when I ask the senior people in my organization for their feedback. They really respect the fact that I have the guts to just flat out ask them how I did on something, which shows I really want to keep getting better. They seem to think most people are afraid to ask or don’t really want to know. And now BoxScore gives them an easy way to tell me everything I need to know -- in less than 30 seconds.
